

BBC Arts with Arts Council England, as part of an ongoing relationship, is launching a Culture in Quarantine fund for around 25 established England-based artists of any discipline to produce new works in creative media - video, audio and interactive.

Commissions do not need to be about the current emergency, but they do need to adhere imaginatively and lawfully to the principles of self-isolation. Depending on their nature, each work will be hosted by the BBC online and/or on-air.

We will be inviting brief expressions of interest explaining your idea, how it could be made, and a ballpark budget by Wednesday 8 April. Ideas can be submitted by artists or by the organisations that represent them. Collaborations between artists of different disciplines are welcome.

The online application form, terms and conditions, and FAQ's will be live by end of the week.

Dear All (in England)

I'm really sorry but this is for Arts Council England only but hopefully the other nations will follow suit.....

When so many of you are using different media platforms to connect and deliver music therapy this looks like a great opportunity for some. Please let me know if you apply and if a supporting letter from BAMT would enhance your application.

Please keep an eye out for the application form etc on <https://www.thespace.org> and www.artscouncil.org.uk

With best wishes

Andrew
